Teaching Experience

Undergraduate Courses: American History Survey (both halves, classes of 40 and 250, with teaching assistants), American Civilization; American Military History (one-semester survey); Military History (two-semester course), Naval History (1400 to 1815, the first semester of a two-semester course), Legacy of the Western World, Colonial America, Revolutionary America, The United States and the Conflicts in Southeast Asia from 1945 to 1975, and Senior Thesis. Courses incorporate lecture (with PowerPoint), discussion, and Blackboard. Some have been podcast for use by students enrolled in the course.

Graduate Seminars:

Strategy and Policy (George Washington University, History 230) is a graduate seminar. The course is a survey of military and naval history from 1494 to the present, based on readings from Peter Paret's Makers of Modern Strategy, Clausewitz, Mahan, Jomini, Russell Weigley's American Way of War, the Oxford History of Modern Warfare, Geoffrey Parker's The Military Revolution, Jeremy Black's War and the World, and extracts from the treaties of Westphalia, Utrecht, Paris (1763, 1783, and 1954) and Versailles. Students analyze critical strategic decisions of recent conflicts. The course includes both discussion and lectures that incorporate PowerPoint presentations.

Readings in Naval History from Salamis to Vietnam reviews classic writings in naval history, such as Mahan's Influence of Sea Power upon History, 1660-1783; Corbett's Some Principles of Naval Warfare; Guilmartin's Gunpowder and Galleys; Theodore Roosevelt's Naval War of 1812; Garrett Mattingly's The Armada; Nicholas Rodger's The Command of the Ocean: A Naval History of Britain, 1649-1815; Evans and Peatie's Kaigun, Strategy, Tactics, and Technology in the Imperial Japanese Navy, 1887 - 1941; Spector's Eagle against the Sun, and others.

As a Graduate Teaching Assistant for three years, I conducted discussion groups for approximately 400 students in sections ranging from two to over thirty members. I assisted in teaching the second half of the American History Survey (1876 to the Present, History 72) four times, for three members of the faculty. I also assisted twice in teaching the first half of the American History Survey (from before first contact to 1877, History 71). I supervised discussion and provided lectures that incorporated PowerPoint Presentations.
